28. Musical genres can die when people stop listening to them and younger generations lose interest. If artists no longer create new songs in that style, the genre slowly disappears from radio, concerts, and culture. Also, when new genres become more popular, older ones may be forgotten. I think genres die because music is always changing, and people's tastes move on to something fresh.

30. Football is very important in my country because it brings people together and creates a strong sense of unity. Many families and friends gather to watch matches, and local clubs give young people hope and motivation. It has also influenced our culture by inspiring songs, celebrations, and even national pride during international games. I believe football is more than just a sport; it is part of our identity and community life.

 30. People in my country approach life in different ways depending on their traditions, lifestyles, and goals. Some people focus on education and career, while others value family life and community more. In villages, people often live simply and close to nature, but in cities, life is faster and more modern. I think these differences make our country diverse and give it a special cultural richness.
